LALIVE promotes counsel to partner

By Adam Dobrik on Friday, 19 December 2014

LALIVE has promoted Daniel Bühr to partner in the firm's white-collar crime and compliance practice in Zurich.

Bühr, 50, advises clients on the US Department of Justice's non-prosecution agreement programme for Swiss banks in connection with tax fraud offences. He is also representing a company in relation to a Libor investigation carried out by the Swiss Competition Commission.

Bühr, who has spent the past eight years working on white-collar crime matters, said he divides his practice into three areas: regulatory issues, competition law and compliance management. He said improving companies' compliance programmes is particularly key to his practice.

"There is a feeling that many compliance programmes are inefficient and just not working," he said, adding: "Too many companies are under investigation or facing fines for misconduct."

LALIVE partner Alexander Troller said: "We are thrilled with Daniel's promotion and the continued development of his and our practice in both investigations and compliance management law. He brings not only valued expertise and experience, but also valued guidance to the next generation of specialists working in our team."
